

Addressing health impact of climate change and loss of biodiversity, and icddr,b co-creating adaptation strategies in Bangladesh.

Ashish KC 1,2; Ruchira Tabassum Naved 3; Johan Friberg 1,4; Manzoor A. Hanifi 3; Paul Egan 1,5; Anisur Rahman 2,3; Ebba Malmqvist 1,4; Ammatul Fardousi 3; Aida Bargués-Tobella 1,5; Meena Daivadanam 1,2,7; Masoud Vaezghasemi 1,6; Kristi Sidney Annerstedt 1,7; Xiankeng Choong 1,7; Karin Hugelius 1,8; Shams El Arifeen 3

Objective- To understand the impact and lived experience of the on-going climate and biodiversity crises among women, children and indigenous population and co-create sustainable solutions in Bangladesh.

Method- A mixed method study utilizing 30 years of multigenerational, longitudinal, individual level data combined with social and environmental predictors from health and demographic surveillance sites in Matlab and Chakaria available at iccdrb.

© iccdrb

Study Activities*

- 1. Epidemiological study to assess impact of climate change and biodiversity loss on women and children.
- 2. Perception on risk, interlinkage, consequences of the crises and biodiversity loss.
- 3. Political and Policy context analysis on action for climate change and loss of biodiversity
- 4. Co-design and pilot implement adaptation and mitigation strategies for vulnerable population

*The scope of study implementation depends on resource allocation